By Caitlin B. Gotta be honest, I was not thrilled by the size of the borders around the images on these cards. I'd rather see the pictures enlarged and/or cropped to fit the dimensions of the card than have such huge borders around them. I've been using those spaces to write bits of cheeky commentary about the pictures (example: one card has a picture of a four-person bicycle pile-up on an unpaved road, so I wrote something like "this is me after swerving to avoid a squirrel while biking through the mean streets of NYC" and sent it to my parents)... but I still wish the borders were smaller. You know what else is kind of annoying? The cards are oversized and thick, which is great for durability, but it also means that you need to use letter stamps instead of the cheaper postcard stamps. Still, the pictures are pretty neat, and I'm not all that unhappy with this purchase.

An elephant on a high wire. A boy with his pet rats. Three women with nine legs? Collected from far and wide, this collection of 30 postcards provides a wacky and wonderful sampling of photography from the four corners of the globe. These humorous cards will inject wit, whimsy, and quirkiness into any correspondence.
